Our Nguni Beef

Evidence suggests that the Khoi-Khoi herded Nguni cattle in the Sneeuberg Mountains as far back as 2,000 years ago. In 2009, Charlotte Daneel reintroduced these beautiful cattle to the reserve, where they now roam freely alongside the other wildlife.

Our Nguni cattle are raised naturally, without supplementary feeding, growth hormones, vaccinations or antibiotics. We provide them with space to roam, natural grazing, herbs, leaves and access to natural water resources.

Due to our climate and minimal human intervention, our Nguni cattle grow slowly, taking approximately four to five years to reach slaughter weight. We believe this natural approach produces exceptional beef that reflects the unique environment in which our cattle live.

Our Venison

Our venison comes from wildlife on Sneeuberg Nature Reserve, with the exception of our kudu. Our sole hunter, Deon Schoombee, is a highly knowledgeable and respectful hunter who almost always hunts on foot.

This approach reflects our respect for the land and the wildlife that call the reserve home.

All meat is delivered deep-frozen to help maintain quality and ensure food safety.
